The Gentleman from Banaras) is a 1998 Hindi Indian comedy film directed by David Dhawan. The film stars Govinda, Ramia, Keder Khan, Shakti Kapoor and Bindu. The film was inspired by William Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew and the 1972 Tamil film Patikada Pattanama. [1] Plot Gopi (Govinda) is a simple man from Banaras. She marries a returning immigrant, Madhu (Ramya). He's family and loyal. He's a bold, happy-go-lucky guy. It represents Indian values. She doesn't mind taking a dip in the village lake in a bikini. One day it's her birthday party and she starts drinking and dancing. Gopi's ashamed that his wife is like this. He's furious and slaps her. He acknowledges his mistake, but he ran away. He wants to live abroad. He wants to stay with his mother in his village. It's a toxic. Mother wants the bride back. He decides to take the bride back, but after he taught her a lesson. He goes to Singapore and other foreign territories to hunt for his runaway bride. Occasionally they meet each other. It makes her pregnant and prevents the doctor from aborting the child. She's having a baby boy. In the meantime, he's getting rich and famous. He leaves with the 15-day-old child and returns to his village and threatens to remarry. The scene is set for his re-marriage, but he reappears and wants the child back. She says if she can't live without her 15-year-old child, then why did she want to separate his mother from her child? She realizes her mistake.
